

I'm not robot!

- i. Reinstall the pedals
- j. Lubricate the pivot bolts.

Discrepancy: The rudder pedal adjustment pins are frozen.

1. Apply penetrant oil on the latch pin. Allow it to seep in to free up the pin.
2. If penetrant oil does not work, remove the latch pin lever. It is held on with a screw on the forward side of the pedal arm.
3. Gently rotate the latch pin with an open end wrench until it is free.
4. Clean and treat any corrosion.
5. Lubricate the pin and reassemble the latch.
6. Check for proper pin engagement.

Tip: Frozen rudder adjustment pins are usually the result of corrosion.

Tip: Remove corrosion with a small round wire brush, or 220 wet/dry sandpaper taped around a small wooden dowel. Use a cotton swap to apply Alodine and Magnadyne, then (after completely drying) zinc chromate.

Tip: Latch pins can often be moved after a generous soaking with penetrating oil. Use parallel-jaw pliers with smooth jaws, without teeth, to apply left-right pressure to the adjustment pins.

Caution: Make flap UP and DOWN adjustments with a suitable power supply connected to the aircraft that provides the approximate voltage output of an operating alternator or generator. Flap UP limit adjustments made with battery voltage only will most likely be too tight when the flaps are retracted with an alternator or generator on line.

9. Check the flap system.

Check the condition and operation of the:

1. Flaps and flap limit switches.
2. Flap position indicator.
3. Flap motor.
4. Flexible drive shafts.

Discrepancy: The flap motor has a sound of preloading the flex drive at the end of its travel.

1. The flap motor limit switch is not turning off the motor prior to one or both flaps reaching the end of a flap track.
